

Energy

As the energy industry evolves due to changes in technology, legislation, and regulation, clients rely on our in-depth experience and vast resources to address their legal needs in the new global economy.

With a geographic footprint that includes Louisiana, Texas, Florida, and Washington, D.C., we have a sophisticated domestic and international energy practice. We represent clients involved in virtually all aspects of the energy industry—from the upstream, midstream, and downstream sectors of the oil and gas industry, including environmental concerns, to power generation and mining. We have handled complex energy transactions (both onshore and offshore), complex regulatory matters, and all forms of energy related disputes and litigation. Our competitive rate structure and service-based approach allows us to negotiate, regulate, and resolve a broad spectrum of energy matters effectively, economically, and efficiently. Our clients, large and small, range from multinational public companies to small independents. They include major producers, independent producers, joint venturers, operators, pipeline companies, service companies, refining and chemical companies, power generation and transmission companies, landowners, royalty interest owners, and financial institutions.